Along the Warwick to Ephrata Trail

Traveling the Warwick to Ephrata Trail you'll find that history, nature and interesting sights abound.

Lititz Borough: Fittingly, the WERT begins at Lititz Springs Park, where a replica of the old Reading & Columbia RR station now acts as a visitor center. The park is the site of the oldest continuous 4th of July celebration in the country.

Warwick Township: The Township's Municipal Campus features parking for the trail along with a number of recreational opportunities, including a bike rental facility and bicycle maintenance station.

Ephrata Township: Now renovated for trail use, the steel bridge crossing the Cocalico Creek is shown here during its construction in 1909, replacing an earlier wooden structure and allowing the Reading & Columbia line to use heavier locomotives.

Akron Borough: A neighbor of the trail has constructed a whimsical Garden Gnome display alongside the trail to delight children and adults alike.

Ephrata Borough: In Ephrata's trailside Veterans Plaza, you'll find a memorial dedicated to Major Richard Winters, whose Easy Company, the "Band of Brothers," has been famously portrayed in books and movies.

TRAIL ACCESS GUIDE

The WERT occupies an abandoned section of the original Reading & Columbia Railroad, which saw its first train in 1863. Built to connect the coal and industries of the Schuylkill River Valley with the Chesapeake Bay, the line once saw as many as 10 passenger trains per day along with numerous freights, like this 1941 Reading RR train near Millway.
